

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: NLRB HOLDS THAT POLICY PROHIBITING RECORDING DEVICES IN THE WORKPLACE VIOLATES EMPLOYEES' SECTION 7 RIGHTS

In a recent decision, the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) struck down an employer's work rule that prohibited employees from recording workplace meetings and conversations without management approval, finding that such a policy could prevent employees from engaging in protected activity, which is protected by Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA).

In this case, the employee handbook had, like many employee handbooks, a policy prohibiting employees from recording company meetings and other aspects of the workplace. These policies are typically put in place to protect employees' privacy and to protect employers' confidential information and trade secrets. However, a 2-1 majority of the NLRB found that employees could reasonably understand such a rule to prohibit unionization efforts or engagement in other collective or concerted activities to advance their job-related interests. The NLRB held that photo, audio, and video recording at the workplace could be a protected activity under certain circumstances, such as documenting picketing activities, unsafe working conditions, discussions regarding terms and conditions of employment, or an employer inconsistently applying workplace rules. Because the rule in question was simply a blanket rule prohibiting recording, the NLRB ordered the company to remove the policy.

The NLRB is showing no signs of slowing down in its quest to expand the reach of Section 7 far beyond the traditional view of "protected, concerted activity." Employers should carefully review and consider their workplace policies in light of this ruling and other NLRB decisions that have found other workplace rules infringing upon employees' Section 7 rights. Employers' rules restricting use of recording devices need to either be tied to particular employer interests, such as maintaining a customer's privacy or an employer's trade secrets, or be narrow enough to only prohibit recording in limited circumstances. Otherwise, employers, even non-union employers, could be subject to an NLRB unfair labor charge challenging their workplace recording policies.

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: NLRB

GENERAL COUNSEL ISSUES GUIDANCE ON EMPLOYEE HANDBOOKS

On March 18, 2015, the NLRB General Counsel issued a report concerning recent cases that raise significant legal and policy issues regarding employee handbook rules. Recently, the NLRB has been focusing on non-union employer's handbooks and whether they violate Section 7 of the NLRA, which permits employees to discuss wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment and to otherwise engage in protected concerted activity. The most clear violation of Section 7 would be a ban on union activity; however, if an employee could reasonably construe a rule or policy to prohibit activities protected by Section 7, the NLRB will find that it is in violation of the law. The report gives specific examples of handbook policies that were found lawful and unlawful and why. The report specifically states that even well-intentioned rules that would inhibit employees from engaging in activities protected by the Act are not allowed under the law. The rules and policies that are most frequently called into question are those covering confidentiality, professionalism, anti-harassment, trademark, photography/recording, and media contact.

Confidentiality policies cannot specifically prohibit employees from discussing the terms and conditions of their employment (e.g., wages, hours, workplace complaints), nor can the policies be reasonably understood to prohibit such discussions. Policies cannot broadly define "employee" or "personnel" information as confidential. However, the NLRB does recognize that employers have a substantial and legitimate interest in maintaining the privacy of certain business information.

Employee conduct policies will run afoul of the NLRA if they prohibit employees from engaging in disrespectful, negative, inappropriate, or rude conduct toward the employer or management absent sufficient clarification or context. Even false or defamatory statements can find protection under Section 7 unless they are "maliciously false." Employers can promulgate blanket rules that require employees to be respectful and professional to clients and competitors because there is a sufficient business interest in that behavior. Employers are also permitted to ban insubordinate behavior. However, employers cannot ban employees from negative or inappropriate discussions with their fellow employees because employees have the right to argue and debate with each other about unions, management, and the terms and conditions of employment, which can sometimes be contentious. Therefore, anti-harassment rules cannot be overly broad either. Employers cannot ban employees from discussing terms and conditions of employment with third parties, including news media. Although employers may designate who can make official statements to the media on behalf of the company, they cannot ban employees from speaking to third parties on their own behalf or on behalf of other employees.

Although employers have an interest in protecting their intellectual property, the NLRB has taken the stance that rules prohibiting employees' fair use of that property are unlawful. This "fair use" includes using things such as company names and logos on picket signs, leaflets, and other protest material because these are non-commercial uses. According to the report, employees have a Section 7 right to photograph and make recordings in furtherance of their protected concerted activity, including the right to use personal devices to take such pictures and recordings. Therefore, a total ban on photography, recordings, or use of personal devices is overbroad if it can be read to prohibit use during breaks and other non-work time.

Employer rules regulating when employees can leave work are unlawful if employees could reasonably read them as forbidding protected strikes and walkouts, as the right to go on strike is a fundamental Section 7 right. Policies should reflect that leaving their posts for reasons unrelated to protected activity will subject employees to discipline.

Because Section 7 allows employees to engage in activity to improve their terms and conditions of employment, which may be in conflict with the interests of an employer, broad conflict-of-interest policies are unlawful. Employer policies should be limited to legitimate business interests.

The differences between what is lawful and what is not are incredibly nuanced, and the General Counsel's report did not present what could be considered "bright line" rules. The NLRB has stated that it will read rules in context with other rules and not in isolation, which could lead potentially unlawful policies to be held lawful in context. Overall, the emphasis is that rules need to be narrowly tailored and include context and examples in order to steer clear of violating the NLRA.

It should be noted that the General Counsel's report is not law but, instead, represents the current enforcement policy of the NLRB. However, given the NLRB's recent aggressive position relative to enforcing Section 7 rights in non-union workplaces, employers should review their handbooks to determine if any of their rules or policies may run afoul of the NLRB's current set of enforcement policies concerning employee handbooks.

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: EEOC ISSUES UPDATED ENFORCEMENT GUIDANCE ON PREGNANCY DISCRIMINATION

On July 14, 2014, the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunities Commission ("EEOC") issued updated enforcement guidance regarding the Pregnancy Discrimination Act ("PDA") and the Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”) as they apply to pregnant workers. The EEOC’s guidance discusses a number of issues related to pregnancy discrimination and other pregnancy related issues and provides insight into the agency’s interpretation of those issues and employers’ obligations under the PDA and ADA relative to pregnant employees. The EEOC also issued a question and answer sheet about the EEOC’s enforcement guidance and pregnancy related issues and a fact sheet for small businesses.

Among a number of other issues, the EEOC’s guidance discusses:

- The PDA’s coverage as it relates to current pregnancy, past pregnancy, and a woman’s potential to become pregnant or intended pregnancy.
- Discrimination based on lactation and breastfeeding and other medical conditions related to pregnancy or child birth.
- When employers may be required to provide light duty for pregnant employees.
- The prohibition against forcing an employee to take leave because she is pregnant and other issues related to parental leave.
- When employers may have to provide reasonable accommodations to employees with pregnancy-related impairments.
- Other legal requirements affecting pregnant workers, such as the Family and Medical Leave Act and Section 4207 of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (requiring employers to provide “reasonable break time” for breastfeeding employees to express breast milk).
- The EEOC’s proffered best practices for employers in handling pregnancy-related matters in the workplace.

The EEOC’s updated guidance provides a clear indication of the EEOC’s position and interpretation relative to the PDA and ADA as they relate to pregnancy discrimination and other pregnancy related issues in the workplace. While this guidance may provide some insight into the agency’s position and likely enforcement efforts, employers should remember that it is merely guidance and does not have the force and effect of law.

One of the more controversial elements of the EEOC’s new guidance arises from the EEOC’s position that employers’ failure to treat pregnant employees the same as non-pregnant employees similar in their ability or inability to work is a violation of the PDA. This becomes problematic for employers who have traditionally reserved light duty positions for workers with restrictions resulting from an on-the-job injury while not providing light duty to employees who have similar temporary restrictions. The EEOC takes the position that the PDA requires employers who offer light duty work to employees who have restrictions resulting from injury on the job to offer that same light duty work to a pregnant employee with the same restrictions.

In light of this new guidance, employers should reevaluate their practices and policies related to pregnancy and pregnancy-related issues, especially with regard to requests for accommodation, and more carefully consider each and every employment action and decision involving pregnancy in the workplace.

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: IS YOUR BUSINESS EXPOSED TO LIABILITY FOR YOUR COMPANY'S LEASED EMPLOYEES/TEMPORARY WORKERS?

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: WILL EMPLOYEES SOON BE PERMITTED TO USE COMPANY E-MAIL FOR UNION ORGANIZING ACTIVITIES?

Recent activity by the National Labor Relations Board ("NLRB") suggests that the Board may overturn a 2007 landmark decision in which it held that employees have no statutory right to use their employers' electronic communications systems for non-business purposes, including union organization and other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection (also known as "Section 7 rights"). See 29 U.S.C. § 157. The Board's 2007 landmark decision is known as the "Register Guard decision".

On April 30, 2014, the NLRB issued a Notice and Invitation to File Briefs in the matter of Purple Communications, Inc., inviting parties and other interested individuals and organizations to answer the question of whether the Board should reconsider or overrule its 2007 decision in Register Guard. The NLRB invites briefing and evidence to address the following questions:

- Should the Board reconsider its conclusion in Register Guard that employees do not have a statutory right to use their employer's email system or other electronic communications systems for Section 7 activity?
- If the Board overrules Register Guard, what standards, restrictions, and factors should be applied to employee access to employers' electronic communications systems?
- To what extent and how should the impact on the employer affect the issue?
- Do employees' personal electronic devices, social media accounts, and/or personal email accounts affect the proper balance to be struck between employers' rights and employees' rights under the NLRA to communicate about work-related matters?

- Are there any other technological issues regarding email or other electronic communications systems or any relevant technological changes that have occurred since the Board's 2007 Register Guard decision that should be taken into account?

If the NLRB overrules its Register Guard decision, employees may be permitted to use employers' email and communications systems for Section 7 activity, including union organizing activities.

Employers should pay close attention to the Board's decision in Purple Communications, Inc., as it could have a significant impact on employers' policies and practices regarding employees' personal use of company communications systems. We will keep you informed when the Board issues its decision.

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: HAVE YOU DONE YOUR HR SPRING CLEANING?

Spring is finally here! Like household cleaning, it is also important to do spring cleaning in the workplace. Spring is a great time for employers to audit their human resources policies and procedures to account for recent changes in state and/or federal law and to find and correct potential problems before they turn into costly claims or lawsuits.

Failing to regularly review your personnel policies and procedures could create litigation risks for your business. The key areas of focus for your workplace spring cleaning should include:

- Reviewing and revising employee handbooks and other individual policies as needed;
- Reviewing and revising your personnel practices and procedures regarding:
 - Avoiding discrimination, harassment, and retaliation in all aspects of employment;
 - Approving and managing leaves of absence;
 - Accommodating disabilities or religious needs;
 - Wage and hour issues; and
 - Disciplinary practices and investigations.
- Identifying any important changes in federal and state law, determining how any changes will affect your policies and procedures, and revising those policies and procedures accordingly.
- Conducting training and re-training for key personnel on important human resources policies such as harassment.

Reviewing your personnel policies and procedures annually and ensuring your employees have the proper training to implement and enforce your policies and procedures is a springtime best practice for employers.

If you would like additional resources to assist you in conducting your human resources audit or are looking for someone to conduct informational training for your employees or supervisors, please contact us.

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: WISCONSIN PASSES SOCIAL MEDIA PROTECTION ACT - HOW WILL IT AFFECT YOUR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES?

On April 8, 2014, Governor Scott Walker signed into law the Wisconsin Social Media Protection Act (the “Act”). 2013 Wisconsin Act 208. The new law, which went into effect on April 10, 2014, Wis. Stat. § 995.55, prohibits employers from requesting an employee or an applicant to grant access to, allow observation of, or disclose information that allows access to or observation of the employee’s or applicant’s “Personal Internet account,” defined as an “Internet-based account that is created and used by an individual exclusively for purposes of personal communications.”

Specifically, under the new law, employers may not:

- Request or require an employee or applicant for employment to disclose access information for a Personal Internet account or otherwise grant access to or allow observation of that account as a condition of employment;
- Discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee for:
 - Exercising his or her right to refuse to disclose access information, grant access to, or allow observation of his or her Personal Internet account;
 - Opposing a practice prohibited under the Act;
 - Filing a complaint or attempting to enforce any right under the Act; or
 - Testifying or assisting in any action or proceeding to enforce any right under the Act.
 - Refuse to hire an applicant for employment because the applicant refused to disclose access information for, grant access to, or allow observation of the applicant’s Personal Internet account.

The Act does, however, permit an employer to do any of the following:

- Request or require an employee to disclose access information to allow the employer to gain access to an account, service, or electronic communications device that the employer supplied or paid for (in whole or in part) in connection with the employee's employment or used for the employer's business purposes;

- Discharge or discipline an employee for transferring the employer's proprietary or confidential or financial information to the employee's Personal Internet account without the employer's authorization;
- Conducting an investigation or requiring an employee to cooperate in an investigation if an employer has reasonable cause to believe that there has been:
 - Any alleged unauthorized transfer of confidential, proprietary, or financial information to the employee's Personal Internet account; or
 - Any other alleged employment-related misconduct, violation of the law, or violation of the employer's work rules, as specified in an employee handbook, if the misconduct is related to activity on the employee's Personal Internet account.

(Although an employer can require an employee to grant access to or allow observation of the employee's Personal Internet accounts for this purpose, the employer may not require the employee to disclose access information for that account.)

- Restrict or prohibit an employee's access to certain internet sites while using an electronic communication device supplied or paid for in whole or in part by the employer or while using the employer's network or other resources;
- Comply with a duty to:
 - Screen applicants prior to hiring; or
 - Monitor or retain employee communications as required by state or federal laws, rules, and regulations or the rules of a self-regulatory organization.
 - View, access, or use information about an employee or applicant for employment that can be obtained without access information or is available in the public domain; and
 - Request or require an employee to disclose his or her personal e-mail address.

An employee or applicant who believes he or she was discharged or otherwise discriminated against in violation of the Act may file a complaint with the Department of Workforce Development in the same manner as other employment discrimination complaints are filed and processed with the Department.

Employers should review and revise their policies and practices to ensure that they are in compliance with the Act. For more information about the Wisconsin Social Media Protection Act or if you have questions about whether your practices comply with the new law, please contact us.

EMPLOYMENT LAWSCENE ALERT: SHOULD YOU CHANGE YOUR WORKPLACE POLICIES TO ADDRESS E-CIGARETTES?

As “e-cigarettes” grow in popularity, employers must decide how to address the use of e-cigarettes in the workplace. Electronic cigarettes or “e-cigarettes” are battery-operated devices that deliver nicotine or other substances to its user in the form of a vapor that is then inhaled. Many e-cigarettes are manufactured to look just like everyday objects that can be found in the workplace, such as pens or USB sticks.

E-cigarettes are currently unregulated by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, which means the FDA has not evaluated any e-cigarettes for safety or effectiveness. A number of recent independent studies on the effects of e-cigarettes and the emissions from those devices have yielded mixed results, with some indicating that the vapor emitted by e-cigarettes contains some of the same carcinogens that you find in traditional cigarette smoke. So, as an employer, how can you know whether you should be regulating the use of these devices in the workplace?

Currently, there is no federal law regulating the use of e-cigarettes and no state has completely banned their use. Twenty-four (24) states, including Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia currently have “smoke-free” laws that prohibit smoking of traditional tobacco cigarettes in the workplace. Because e-cigarettes are still fairly new, most of these “smoke-free” laws do not address whether the use of e-cigarettes is also prohibited in the workplace. Recently, a number of municipalities and some states have enacted new laws or amended their “smoke-free” laws to ban the use of e-cigarettes in the same way use of traditional tobacco cigarettes is prohibited in the workplace.

Wisconsin’s legislature has taken an approach quite different from the trend toward banning the use of e-cigarettes in the workplace and other public places. The Wisconsin legislature has introduced a bill that, if passed, would exclude e-cigarettes from the types of smoking devices that are prohibited under Wisconsin’s “smoke-free” law, which would mean that using e-cigarettes would be permitted in those places where smoking traditional cigarettes is now prohibited. It is not likely, however, that this bill would require private employers to allow employees to use e-cigarettes in the workplace.

With more employees bringing e-cigarettes into the workplace, employers are faced with the decision whether to permit or ban employees’ use of e-cigarettes at work. Some employers find that permitting employees to use e-cigarettes cuts down on the number of smoking breaks employees take each day, thereby increasing some employees’ productivity, while other employers find that e-cigarettes create a distraction for users and non-users alike.

Absent legal restrictions regarding the use of e-cigarettes in most cities and states, employers in those jurisdictions are free to create their own reasonable policies addressing the use of e-cigarettes just as they would maintain policies addressing or restricting other activities and conduct that could interfere with employees' ability to do their jobs or otherwise disrupt the workplace.

Employers should stay up to date on state and municipal laws and ordinances that could affect how employers may be required to treat the use of e-cigarettes in the workplace.

NEW CHANGES TO WISCONSIN'S UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE LAWS TAKE EFFECT JANUARY 5, 2014

The Wisconsin Legislature recently enacted major changes to Wisconsin's unemployment insurance laws, a number of which will become effective on January 5, 2014. The most significant changes include an expansion of what conduct constitutes "misconduct" and establishes a new standard of "substantial fault," which if proven, can temporarily disqualify an employee for unemployment insurance benefits. Another significant change limits the circumstances under which an employee may be entitled to unemployment benefits following a voluntary resignation. These new changes can be found in Wisconsin's 2013-2015 Biennial Budget Bill, 2013 Wisconsin Act 20 ("Act 20"). The Wisconsin Legislature recently enacted major changes to Wisconsin's unemployment insurance laws, a number of which will become effective on January 5, 2014. The most significant changes include an expansion of what conduct constitutes "misconduct" and establishes a new standard of "substantial fault," which if proven, can temporarily disqualify an employee for unemployment insurance benefits. Another significant change limits the circumstances under which an employee may be entitled to unemployment benefits following a voluntary resignation. These new changes can be found in Wisconsin's 2013-2015 Biennial Budget Bill, 2013 Wisconsin Act 20 ("Act 20").

Definition of Misconduct Wis. Stat. § 108.04(5) currently provides that claimants who are terminated for "misconduct" are temporarily ineligible for unemployment compensation benefits. Act 20 amends Wis. Stat. § 108.04(5) to incorporate the longstanding definition of "misconduct" that was set forth by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in Boynton Cab Co. v. Neubeck and Industrial Comm'n, 237 Wis. 249, 296 (1941). Boynton set a high standard for misconduct that was difficult for employers to meet. Act 20 incorporates, but further expands that standard to include actions and conduct that may not have been considered “misconduct” under the Boynton standard.

Act 20 also eliminates the stringent requirements relating to termination for absenteeism and tardiness (formerly set forth in Wis. Stat. § 108.04(5g)) and incorporates absenteeism and tardiness within the new definition of “misconduct.” Pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 108.04(5)(e), absenteeism or excessive tardiness by an employee in violation of the employer’s policy, if the employee does not provide both notice and a valid reason for the absenteeism or tardiness, constitutes misconduct.

This new definition of misconduct applies to new unemployment compensation claims filed on or after January 5, 2014.

Substantial Fault Act 20 also creates a new standard – the “substantial fault” standard – intended to cover conduct by an employee that does not rise to the level of misconduct, but can still temporarily disqualify employees for unemployment compensation benefits. An employee who is terminated for “substantial fault” of the employee connected with the employee’s work, will be temporarily ineligible for benefits. “Substantial fault” includes acts or omissions over which an employee exercised reasonable control and which violate reasonable requirements of the employer. Substantial fault does not include: minor rule violations, unless the violation is repeated after the employee is warned; inadvertent errors by the employee; and any failure of the employee to perform work due to insufficient skill, ability, or equipment.

Voluntary Resignation/Quit Exceptions Act 20 changes the law with respect to the current statutory exceptions that allow an employee to voluntarily resign from employment and still collect unemployment benefits if the resignation involved certain circumstances. Act 20 eliminates 8 of the previously recognized exceptions and modifies four of the remaining exceptions. These changes will first apply to claims for unemployment benefits filed on or after January 5, 2014.

The following exceptions are no longer recognized under Wisconsin law and will no longer be valid reasons for an employee to collect unemployment benefits after he or she has voluntarily resigned employment:

1. Employee terminated his or her employment to accept a recall to work for a former employer within 52 weeks after having last worked for that employer.
2. Employee maintained temporary residence near the work terminated, maintained a permanent residence in another locality, and terminated the work and returned to his or her permanent residence because the work available was reduced to less than 20 hours per week in at least 2 consecutive weeks.
3. Employee left or lost his or her work because of reaching the employer’s compulsory retirement age.

4. Employee terminated part-time work because of loss of other full-time employment makes it economically unfeasible for employee to continue part-time work.

5. Employee terminates work with a labor organization if termination cause employee to lose seniority rights granted under a collective bargaining agreement and if termination results in loss of employee's employment with the employer that is party to the collective bargaining agreement.

6. Employee terminated work in a position serving as a part-time elected or appointed member of a government body or representative of employees, employee was engaged in work for an employer other than the employer in which the employee served as the member or representative, and employee was paid wages in terminated work constituting not more than 5% of employee's base period wages for purpose of entitlement for benefits.

7. Employee owns or controls an ownership interest in a family corporation and employee's employment was terminated because of an involuntary cessation of the business of the corporation under certain conditions.

Employers should be sure to update their employee handbooks, policies, and procedures to reflect these new changes that will take effect January 5th. If you have questions about which policies you should update or would like assistance in reviewing your existing policies to ensure compliance with these updates, please contact us.

DOES YOUR "AT-WILL" EMPLOYMENT STATEMENT VIOLATE THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT?

To maintain its relevancy and expand the scope of its authority, the NLRB continues its attack upon non-union employers' policies. This time the NLRB has positioned its cross-hairs upon employers' "at-will" employment policies or statements. Most non-union employers include within their employee handbook a statement that employees' employment is "at-will," meaning either the employee or the employer may end the employment relationship at any time, for any reason, either with or without notice. Most "at-will" statements further provide that no agent or representative of the employer may enter into any agreement to the contrary unless done so in writing and signed by the president or CEO of the company. These types of statements reflect nothing more than the reality of the legal relationship between the employer and the employee.

The NLRB, however, has recently taken a different viewpoint, finding that such “at-will” statements have a chilling effect upon employees’ Section 7 rights. In American Red Cross Arizona Blood Services Region, an administrative law judge found that the employer had violated Section 8(a)(1) by maintaining the following language in a form that employees were required to sign acknowledging their at-will employment status: “I further agree that the at-will employment relationship cannot be amended, modified or altered in any way.” The NLRB found this language to essentially constitute a waiver by the employee of his/her Section 7 rights to “advocate concertedly ... to change his/her at-will status.”

The NLRB applies a two-step inquiry to determine if a work rule would “reasonably tend to chill employees in the exercise of their Section 7 rights.” First, a rule is unlawful if it explicitly restricts Section 7 activities. Second, if the rule does not explicitly restricted protected activities, it will nonetheless be found to violate the National Labor Relations Act upon a showing that: (1) employees would reasonable construe the language to prohibit Section 7 activity; (2) the rule was promulgated in response to union activity; or (3) the rule has been applied to restrict the exercise of Section 7 rights.

Due to a significant uproar from employers, the NLRB issued two sets of advice memoranda on October 31, 2012 and February 4, 2013, back-pedaling on its position with regard to “at-will” employment statements. In these advice memoranda, the NLRB now takes the position that an “at-will” statement will not be considered to interfere with employees’ Section 7 rights if the statement (1) does not explicitly restrict Section 7 rights, or (2) was promulgated in response to union or other protected activity, or (3) that the policy had been applied to restrict protected activity.

While most employers’ at-will statements will pass the NLRB’s scrutiny relative to employees’ Section 7 rights, this does not mean that all “at-will” statements, especially those that imply that there can never be any other employment relationship between the employee and employer, will be considered lawful under the National Labor Relations Act. To be prudent, employers should review their “at-will” employment statements in their employee handbooks to make sure that such statements do not foreclose to its employees the possibility of a potential modification of the at-will relationship.
